

Call for Papers Journal of Services Research

OVERVIEW

The service sector is a dominant contributor to GDP in most developed and developing nations. A large segment of the population is involved in this sector for their livelihood. It is a requisite that focused academic attention is directed at it. This is an imperative if the sector has to grow in a planned manner in the future. The on-line economy or new age businesses, most of which are service companies, had started with great fanfare but the life cycle of the 'dotcom' companies, some of which have gone bust, have proven at least one thing amongst others – that, the business modeling of these companies were not thought out in their entirety and that the assumptions and benchmarks that were used in strategy formulation were faulty in many cases. This is obviously going to be there when a sunrise sector opens up and indicates that the thinkers, researchers and analysts need to provide guidelines and propose relevant business models. Academia can support the industry if they work together to generate a corpus of research and analytical work to base decisions upon or to at least lend some objectivity to decision making.

The Journal of Services Research is an effort in this direction to help build and document such a corpus by promoting researchers from India and abroad to focus on issues related to services management and provide well researched and tested benchmarks for industry, and also to provide new directions for further research.

Vedatya as an institution identifies itself as an 'educator for the services industry' and focuses on the emerging sectors of service businesses. We feel that it is relevant for us to take an initiative in harnessing academic and industry effort in order to further the boundaries of knowledge in our chosen area of endeavor. We look forward to inputs from relevant quarters-suggesting, criticizing and contributing to the increased awareness and understanding of this sector.
